

A Letter to Fellow Founders

Dear Founder,

I know how hard it is to see something that others don't. People often call us entrepreneurs as if it's some glamorous title society rewards us for. But the truth is, it can get lonely.

There are ideas you want to explore, but no one to bounce them off of. There are challenges you carry quietly because only a few people understand the weight of building a business. Sometimes, even your biggest wins have no one who truly understands what it took to get there.

What many founders are really looking for is a space where people speak the same language. A community that understands the risks, the sacrifices, the uncertainty, and the hope that comes with building something from nothing.

That's why we built Locals for Locals.

Not simply to help people discover great local businesses, but to create a community where founders can support one another. A place where we can share ideas, learn from each other, celebrate wins, navigate challenges, and grow together.

Because when you think about it, local businesses are the backbone of every community. Behind every café, restaurant, shop, studio, and service business is someone trying to create value, support a family, provide jobs, and make their corner of the world a little better.

The journey isn't always easy.

There are things many of us were never taught. Taxes. Accounting. Leadership. Hiring. Scaling. Cash flow. We learn as we go, often through mistakes, and sometimes through painful lessons. Yet we keep going.

Not because it's easy, but because we believe in what we're building. We believe our businesses can create something meaningful for the people around us.

Now imagine what could happen if we didn't build alone.

Imagine a community of founders moving in the same direction. Supporting one another. Sharing knowledge. Opening doors. Sourcing from local farms. Solving larger societal problems together. Creating spaces for the next generation. Supporting the cultural realm.

And imagine conscious consumers joining that movement. Choosing to support businesses that care. Choosing experiences that are meaningful. Choosing to invest in the communities they live in.

What kind of impact could that create? What kind of culture could we build?

This is the moonshot we're pursuing.

Starting in Davao. Then Cebu. Metro Manila. Then across the Philippines. And then, across Southeast Asia.

A movement of local businesses and conscious consumers working together to strengthen the local economy.

Thank you for being part of this journey.

We're honored to build it with you.

With much care and support,

Kris.
